FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

What is the expected scope of the legal services?

You are not expected to go beyond the one-time 45-minute consultation. In that time, you will coach clients so they are empowered to take the next steps themselves, and know what & how to take those steps. You have the discretion to go further with the client, if desired, and will be covered by our malpractice insurance – up to but not including appearance in court.

What areas of law are covered?

Administer Justice provides civil legal aid and does not provide legal counsel for criminal cases.

What is expected of attorneys?

This is an opportunity for attorneys to integrate their faith and practice. You will usually serve once a month for 3-4 hours, during which time you will meet with 3-4 individuals. You are NOT expected to be experts in any area of law the client presents or take a prolonged case in court.

The ABA and most state professional rules of responsibility provide encouragement to volunteer through a clinic (Rule 6.5 or 6.6 usually) which provides guidance on relaxed rules for conflict of interest and attorney-client relationship. Most states allow contractually limiting an appointment such that no attorney client relationship is created.

Administer Justice uses a client agreement based on ABA standards.

Are attorneys covered by malpractice insurance?

Yes. Administer Justice provides malpractice insurance for attorneys serving center clients, from the initial consultations through limited scope representation.

Do volunteer attorneys litigate the clients' cases?

No. The malpractice insurance for a GJC does not cover court appearances.

Per Rule 6.1 of Model Rules of Professional Conduct, do volunteer hours count towards pro bono/public legal services?

Yes.

Does an attorney have to know poverty law?

No. Your role is to assess the circumstances and determine a plan for addressing the client's questions. Lawyers are uniquely qualified to do that. Most states have created excellent self-help resources which, while confusing for a client, are easy to navigate for a lawyer to help coach a client.

You can discuss facts with other lawyers on site and often arrive at a good plan for helping someone. Importantly, people are more than legal problems. The compassion and care you offer has significant impact.

The support team will assist with additional spiritual and social support.
